

The role of interpersonal features in multimodal presentations: a case study of a Spanish academic preparing to present research in English at an international conference

Teresa MORELL Mt.morell@ua.es

Pilar ESCABIAS Pilar.escabias@ua.es

English Studies Department, University of Alicante, Spain

The use of English as the lingua franca (ELF) at international conferences and academics' use of a broader range of modes of communication (Kress, 2010) is becoming common practice. Consequently, many researchers whose mother tongue is other than English need not only to verbally communicate their work in ELF, but also to develop their multimodal competence (i.e., ways of representing and communicating meaning). Thus, in some higher education institutions throughout Europe, courses are being offered to train academics of different disciplines to use ELF and to develop their use and combination of modes. Such is the case at the University of Alicante, Spain, where the 20-hour workshop "Academic English for Teaching and Presenting" is offered for those who will deliver their research at an international conference. In this study we carry out a multimodal discourse analysis based on a Systemic Functional Linguistic (SFL) framework (Morell, 2015) of one workshop participant's video recorded presentation. The choice of the particular performance was due to the audience's positive feedback. In the analysis we focus on the multimodal ensembles, i.e., the combinations of modes, which the speaker used to connect with the audience. Our findings provide further evidence of the important role of interpersonal information in fostering rapport between the speaker and the audience.

References

Kress, G. (2010). Multimodality: A social semiotic approach to contemporary communication. London: Routledge.

Morell, T. (2015). International conference paper presentations: a multimodal analysis to determine effectiveness. English for Specific Purposes 37, 137-150.
doi.org/10.1016/j.esp.2014.10.002

Biodata

Teresa Morell is an Associate Professor at the University of Alicante, Spain. She teaches in the English Department and the Master for Spanish and English as Second and Foreign Languages. Her research interests include oral academic discourse, academic genre pedagogy, and multimodality. She has published in English for Specific Purposes and Journal of English for Academic Purposes.

Pilar Escabias is an Adjunct Professor at the University of Alicante, Spain. She teaches in the English Department and at the Language Center. She is a doctoral student working on oral academic multimodal discourse used by non-native speakers of English.